Description of Property and Eligibility Determination: (Use continuation sheet if necessary and attach map and photo)

The land on which Maryland and Krieger Halls now sit was acquired by Johns Hopkins University in 1902 after which planning began for the new campus. It was not until 1912 that enough funding was in place to begin construction, and Maryland Hall was built between 1913 and 1915 as part of the first phase of construction. It was originally known as the Mechanical and Electrical Engineering Building, but was later renamed Maryland Hall in recognition of the role state funding played in its construction.

Maryland Hall was built in the Colonial Revival style with a long, two-story, 15 bay front façade that is constructed of brick. The three central bays project slightly and support a pedimented gable that runs perpendicular to the dormered hipped roof that covers the rest of the building. At the ridge, centered above the perpendicular gable is a large, octagonal cupola. The majority of the windows are double-hung of various configurations including 12-over-12, 9-over-9, and 15-over-15. The windows in the gabled dormers are double-hung with round headed upper sash.

Like Maryland Hall, Krieger Hall is in the Colonial Revival style. This building, however has a raised stone basement beneath its two story brick façade and dormered hipped roof. Massive brick chimneys project through the roof at either end of the ridge. Like Maryland Hall, the dormers have round-headed double-hung sash, but here the dormer have vaulted, rather than gabled, roofs. Elsewhere, double-hung sash can be found in 15-over-15, 12-over-12, and 6-over-12 configurations. The main entrance to Krieger Hall sports a large portico with a shallow gable roof supported by Tuscan Doric columns.
